

PUBLIC HEALTH SANITARIAN TRAINEE

This is on-the job training to acquire the professional experience, knowledge and certifications necessary to competently fulfill the full professional environmental health responsibilities of Public Health Sanitarian. Public Health Sanitarian work involves all non-engineering aspects of environmental control, including but not limited to investigation and inspection. Trainees receive instruction and experience with applying principles of physical, biological and social sciences for the detection, evaluation, control and management of those environmental factors which influence human health. Trainees will be assisted and closely supervised in planning and implementation of multiple environmental health programs. Trainees are typically assigned less complex facilities, complaints, cases, and investigations than full Public Health Sanitarians, with gradual increase in workload, complexity of duties, and independence as experience is gained. Upon completion of the two (2) year traineeship, and meeting all special requirements as stated in this job specification, incumbents may be advanced to Public Health Sanitarian without further examination.

This is a Competitive position. Applicants must meet the stated minimum qualifications. Any appointment would be made on a Provisional basis, pending the future administration of a Civil Service examination.
